If I Should Lose You.

If I should lose you, sweetheart, And alone be doomed to tread The bleak and gloomy highway, With its flowers drooped and dead, here in August. I would feel one sweet emotion,

That would quicken love anew It would be that God's own blessing Made me happy, once, with you!

If I should lose you, sweetheart, And the songs you sang to me Were but the faintest echo From the land of memory,

They would cling, and be my music, As in days when loving grew --I would listen and in dreaming,

Once more, sweetheart, be with you If I should lose you, sweetheart, And the touch of tender lips Be denied me in the future

As the weary waiting slips, I would kiss the rose you gave, Gave me crowned with sparkling

And its fragrance would, forever, Bring sweet thoughts to me of you

Two IRISH ANECDOTES. - We have so often laughed at Pat for his droll errors of speech that it is pleasant to laugh some one else. It is possible to do this at 2 P. M., Monday, when we recall the old tale of the Yankee and the Irishman, who were riding along a country road together, when they came to a gallows.

"See that, Pat?" said the Yankee with a smile. "Where would you be if the gallows had its due?"

"Roiding along!" said Pat, quietly. Another funny tale is told of a rather idle Irish boy on board a man-of-war. It was very difficult to keep him at work. and the boatswain who had charge of him was much annoyed by the boy's laziness. Seeing him on the maintop one morning, gazing idly out at the sea, the boatswain called out to him:

"Come down out of that, ye rascal Come down out of that, an' oi'll give yez a dozen whacks wid me rope!"

"Faith, sorr" replied the boy, "oi wouldn't come down if ye offered me two dozen!"

WOMAN'S WORLD IN PARAGRAPHS.

One of America's most promising wo man sculptors is Mrs. Katharine T. Prescott of Boston. She is not a society artist, but a good, faithful studio artist. Her life is in her work, not in fashionable teas and newspaper notices. That being the case, Mrs. Prescott is bound to win. She makes bas-relief portraits and ideal studies as well. She also chisels the full round figure, but her bas-reliefs are her especial delight. One of the most striking of her recent works is a head of a "Trilby," her own idea, drawn from Du Maurier's description. She gives the beautiful Trilby a happy, innocent smile and truthful eye. Mrs. Prescott has made, too, an effective head of the singer Melba. Henry Irving never looked stronger or more characteristic than in the marble Mrs. Prescott has made of him, with the face of sweet Ellen Terry beside him. Mrs. Prescott makes casts in bronze as well as in marble. She is an enthusiast and a devoted student and deserves rich success.

Miss Sophie Weil is an illustration of the fact that a woman can run a livery stable successfully, even in New York city, where only the strongest and most skillful may keep footing in any walk in life. Four years ago Miss Weil's father died and left her the livery stable as an inheritance. Instead of selling it 1,565 lbs. > Let each woman decide for herself what she ought or ought not to be and do, and let all the rest, men and women both, mind their own business. No woman who wants to be an old fogy herself and shrink into the narrowest corner of what Artemus Ward called "wimmin's spear" has any right, not a shadow of right, to criticise the woman who feels cramped in that little corner. I wish the anti woman suffragists and the old foggies of both sexes could realize the truth of this. Let them stay a thousand years behind the times themselves if they wish, but let them let the new woman alone. young women are employed as guides.

The guide is an important person to all visitors and sightseers. His effectiveness hangs on his ability to spin the most extraordinary yarns, to always have an answer ready, whether correct or not, and the man who can pour the most information into a tourist in the least time is the one who flourishes.

That is the regulation government guide. But the bureau of engraving and printing prides itself on a superior brand of guide in the shape of six southern young women, Miss Fannie Gilman, Baltimore; Wilhelmina Ballman of Washington; Mrs. Diana Danforth, Forest Glen, Md.; Mrs. Myrtle Duffy, Wheeling; Miss McCarthy, Washington, and Mrs. Lottie Adams of Tennesses who act as ushers to all visitors to the bureau. Of course the place where the government makes its money has an overpowering attraction to people from all over the country, and on account of the work done in the building more almost as hard for a person to get out as been the talk of the town. to get in if he or she has been allowed to walk through the main halls alone to call on an office clerk.

Visitors who are taken into the working sections are subjected to closer scrutiny than they would relish if it was suspected. These six young women are model guides. They are not appointed just to positions as guides. They have passed civil service examinations and been appointed to actual labor in the mechanical divisions.

The best guides are those who have worked in the greatest number of different divisions, so that they are able to impart information because they understand precisely what operations are being carried on and can answer questions intelligently.

Once years ago men were employed for guides, but man's work costs more than woman's labor, and so some brilliant chief determined to try girls. It is utterly impossible to allow ordinary guides such as are admitted in other departments to be about among the work going on. It must necessarily be some responsible employee, and not only does the bureau pride itself on its detailed corps of young ladies, but visitors invariably exclaim: "Oh, she's a girl guide. I'm so glad. I'm tired of men.

"It's not hard work physically, only we do wish sometimes that people would ask new questions," said one. "Everybody asks just the same questions. We always know beforehand what to ex-

"Do you ever give visitors souvenirs?" The six looked at each other merrily. "There, that's one of the usual questions. Give them souvenirs! It would be more than our heads are worth to try it. Why, every scrap of paper here has to be accounted for, even those that are spoiled. Everybody wants a souvenir, some 'little thing' like a $100 bill with only one side engraved, or some other trifle. And sometimes they do get awfully mad with us because we can't yield. If they want souvenirs, they have to buy them on the steps outside. "Do you think you are smarter than men guides?"

'Of course we aren't conceited. You'd better ask the chief. I can tell you. though, that five of us have handled 800 watch divides them up into squads as large as we can conduct around. You see we are expected not only to give the information, but also to keep our eyes on every motion, because visitors are determined to have a souvenir somehow or other and don't stop to think it is an absolutely necessary rule of the bureau not to allow them to take anything away.

pretty blond haired widow, "is to refuse the gifts visitors want to make us. Of course we are paid for our services and are not allowed to accept presents of money or anything else. Some people really become quite indignant at that, and droll things result. One western woman to whom I had given more time than customary because she had asked sensible questions wanted to give me some money and then offered me other things. Of course I tried to explain that it was against the rules of the bureau, when she took out a package of chewing gum, 'Well, I guess they won't mind you're taking some gum.

FROM SINNEMAHONE.

BY ED MOTT.

"I wish to goodness," said the man from over Sinnemahoning way, "that I could remember half what my father used to tell about snakes. I really do. I do indeed. I suppose that if my father had been telling about snakes that lived anywhere else except on the Sinnemahone spread I could have remembered everything. But, Lord! It would take a man with nine memories, every one of 'em phenomenal, to remember even a little bit of what them Sinnemahoning snakes did, because they did so much. They were always doing something, and doing it well. I wish somebody would simply give me an inkling of what there is in that Sinnemahone atmosphere that makes things have so much more snap in them than things have anywhere else on top of earth. Even grasshoppers. Now, I know heaps of places where there is twenty times more grass than is on the Sinnemahone. As for that, Sinnemahone doesn't run particularly to grass. We slash out a good many hoop poles, and we peel considerable of bark. We do a little in the maple sugar way, and our 'taters ain't few to the hill. But we don't brag on our grass. Then why should grasshoppers seem to like to settle down with us so much, and get to be so overpowering smart among us? I give it up. I don't know. But to prove to you that they do, I'll tell you something. I don't pretend to explain these things, mind you. I simply give you the facts. "You know, of course, that there ain't any better bait for trout along late in the season than grasshoppers. Our Sinnemahone grasshoppers know that well, and I want to tell you that it's a hard matter to run one down and catch him when you want to go fishing. But I used to manage, by various slick bits of strategy, to get enough to fish with, but it was hard work, and so I was delighted one day, being over to the county seat, to see in a store an artificial grasshopper, with a hook concealed about it. The grasshopper was as natural as life, and I saw at once that there wasn't any use of my pitting myself any longer against our smart Sinnemahone grasshoppers to get bait, when I could use the artificial grasshopper to fool the trout with, and I bought it. It worked to a charm. I think the trout went for it better than they did for the real thing, for I have an idea that they knew how smart our Sinnemahone grasshoppers were, and were kind o' fraid of 'em. I used that imitation grasshopper with great suc-

"I had a tame trout in a spring near my house. It had been in the spring a year. It was a big one. I had caught it one day on a Sinnemahone grasshopper, and as the hook hadn't hurt it much I put it in a pail of water and got Commerce Building, Louisville it home alive and active. I put it in the spring and it lived and thrived. A funny thing was that the grasshopper I caught the trout with wasn't killed by the treut nor by the hook. Being through fishing, I took the grasshopper off the hook and tossed it on the ground. It moved away, but was minus one leg. Its eyes were just as bright as ever, though, and as I remember it now, it kind o' shook its head and looked volumes as it limped away, headed straight for my place. I don't know where that crippled grasshopper wintered, but when warm weather came next year I give you my word that grasshopper was the first I saw on my place. It was perched on a saw horse in my back yard. I recognized it at once, and it seemed to recognize me, for it shook its head and had a queer look in its eye as It limped on one leg along the saw horse, tumbled off and stumped away.

" 'As long as I've got a place,' said I, 'that grasshopper has a claim on it, and anyone that hurts that grasshopper must settle with me!'

"Well, sir, that grasshopper hung around the place, and hobbled about in a melancholy sort of way, but always with that queer look in its eyes. Every time it met me it settled down and shook its head, spit tobacco juice, as grasshoppers will, and stumped on its way. I know now that that grasshopper had vengeance on its mind, and was only biding its time.

"This was the season I got the artificial grasspopper. I frequently saw the crippled real one sitting on the flat stone over the spring where my pet trout was, glaring down at the trout and shaking its head in a startling way. The grasshopper remembered that this was the trout that had crippled it, and it went to the spring to glare at the trout and show its hate. I used to tremble for it, for my trout just doted on grasshoppers, and I was fearful lest this poor crippled one might tumble in the spring and thus give up the rest of itself to the foe that had bereft it of its leg.

"One day I had been fishing with my artificial grasshopper. I came in, took the leader off my line, with the imitation grasshopper on it, and laid it on the back stoop, being called away for something or other. When I went to get the leader ten or fifteen minutes later it was gone. I looked around, but couldn't find it. Some time afterward I started for the spring to get a pail of water, and as I drew near I saw the crippled grasshopper dragging itself up on the flat stone that covered, or half covered, the spring. I stopped. and then saw that the grasshopper was dragging something up along with it. I started when I saw that it was my missing leader. My first impulse was to go and recover my property, but on second thought I didn't.

"'This unfortunate grasshopper,' I reasoned, 'has some purpose in view. Let us see what it may be.'

"I soon saw. Growing near the flat stone over the spring was a current With great deliberation the bush. crippled grasshopper took one end of my leader in its mouth and hobbled round and round the bush, winding, as I could see, the leader about it. The artificial grasshopper had been hauled up on the stone and lay there in full view. Having taken a firm hitch with the leader about the stem of the currant bush, the vengeful crippled grasshopper pushed its counterpart presentment along toward the edge of the stone, and when it reached there, shoved it over. The artificial grasshopper fell, and there was leader enough left to let it just touch- the water lightly. There was a flash and a splash in the water, and the next instant my pet trout was dashing wildly about in the spring, hooked on the deadly lure and played by the limber current bush. Oh! but it was a stroke of genius! The crippled grasshopper stood on the edge of a stone, looking over at the vengeance it had wrought, glaring savagely and gloating. I could easily have saved the trout. "'But no!' I said. 'It is but retribu-tive justice! Let it stand!' "In a short time the trout was dead. The crippled grasshopper hobbled off of the stone and disappeared. I never saw it again. Will somebody give me an inkling of what there is in that Sinnemahone atmosphere that makes things have so much more snap in them there than things have anywhere else on top of earth? Even grasshoppers. Will some one simply give me an inkling?"

Not even the man in the red, blue, pink, yellow, green and purple mackinaw jacket seemed capable of utterance, and the man from Sinnemahoning way had to go without his inkling. "Oh, yes! Snakes!" said he, suddenly brought to himself. "Lord! I wish my father was here! But he isn't! He couldn't be, very well. He left the banks of the Shinnemahone for the same of Jordan, some years since. My father was a fiddler, and if he is playing the harp half as well as he played the fiddle, he isn't taking a back seat for anybody on the other shore, and I'll bet on it! And how he could tell about snakes! It's a shame the way I've forgot most of the things he used to tell me about 'em, but I remember one that may strike you as a tolerable fair showing as to what Sinnemahone snakes were able to do in the days of my father. Sinnemahone snakes are at the head of the serpent race yet, of course, but in those days they had the benefit of my father, and they simply

"The blowing adder was always a big favorite with my father. The blowing adder, you know, is that interesting snake that has the faculty of flattening out its head to about four times its natural size, then puffing it up, and then blowing a small gale from its mouth for a few seconds. I never knew just what they gained by doing all this, but they do it, and that's enough. The blacksnake was another snake my father liked, but somehow they never liked him, but they feared him, and when he wanted to use 'em they knuckled right down and were used.

"Once my father had a pet blowing adder and a blacksnake that he wanted to be a pet, but which had a feeling against being one, and just wouldn't. It didn't dare to rebel altogether, though, and learned the tricks my father taught it, and did them, but kicked like a steer all the time. blowing adder, on the other hand, was fonder of the old man than a cat of her kittens, and never lost a chance to show it. One of the tricks my father taught the rebellious blacksnake was to take a match in its mouth, reach back and scratch the match on its scaly side, and then rise up on its tail and light father's pipe as he held it in his mouth. It was a neat trick, and used to please father next to knowing that the little jug with the corncob stopper in it wasn't empty.
"Whenever father went to his cabin in the woods for a hunt he always took Jehosaphat and Prudence with him for company. Jehosaphat was the blacksnake and Prudence was the blowing adder. Once, while out on one of these trips, father was taken sick with rheumatism in his cabin, and lay on his bed of straw, unable to move hand or foot. Jehosaphat cheered up and got chipper at once. He tumbled all over himself, father used to say, he felt so good. And he felt more than that. He had murder in his heart. While father lay there helpless the wicked snake took a match in his mouth, glared like a fiend in father's face for a moment, struck the match on his side, just the way the old man had taught him, and then deliberately set fire to the straw on which my father lay helpless. With one more flendish glare at my father Jehosaphat fled from the cabin. "Imagine my father's feelings lying there unable to move, and that fire creeping slowly toward him! He saw no escape from a horrible death. But he didn't know Prudence, the blowing adder. That loving snake woke from a nap in her corner, and soon saw the awful danger my father was in. She dashed over to the burning straw, flattened out her head, and with one tremendous puff blew out the blaze."

"Sinnemahone!" exclaimed the man in the red, blue, pink, yellow, green and purple mackinaw jacket, "let me tell ye sumpin'! That blowin' adder mowt a blowed out that blaze, but there ain't no blowin' adder, nor sweepin' gale, nor howlin' cyclone that kin ever blow out the blaze you'll git into one o' these days, an' when ye git there, jist remember that I told ye so!"-N. Y. Sun.

Did He Shave or Shake It?

In a discussion on the factory bill, one member, according to a report in one of the provincial papers, urged its acceptance on the house, in order to put a stop to the practice of "shaving factory boys to death." During the last parliament Mr. Gladstone indulged one evening in some genial bantering J J. Williams, Mt. Veruon; of Lord Hartington, and the following appeared in one of the provincial reports of the speech: "Such is the modesty of my noble friend that he shaves his head. But I must insist upon placing upon his head the crown which he is entitled to wear." A reference to the report published in the London Journal shows that Lord Hartington did not shave his head, but only shook it .- Macmillan's Magazine.

The "Blues."

Do you ever have the "blues"? Do you know what they come from? Do you want to know how to drive them away? Listen:

The "blues" are simply a natural result of a disorganized liver. Your liver secretes bile instead of discharging it. The bile must be filtered from that which is to make blood, and if not properly filtered your blood becomes impure. Then you feel wretchedly, and "Don't know why you are so 'blue."

Now, in two or three weeks time, you can make yourself feel like a new creature, with rosy cheeks, good appetite, healthy bowels and sound sleep at night. Ask your druggist for Ramon's Tonic Liver Pills and Ra-mon's Tonic Pellets. These are two separate medicines, in separate boxes, but both together they cost only 25 cents.

You will then have a sure treatment which will not only cure your biliousness but prevent constipation in the future by strengthening your digestive system.

At all dealers, or mail, for 25c., 5 boxes $1.00. BROWN MFG. CO., New York.
